Certain frozen sashimi recalled for undeclared wheat, soy, and sesame

CDC has reported a recall of certain frozen olive flounder sashimi products due to undeclared wheat, soy, and sesame in packaged sauces.

If you have a food allergy, this matters. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports Eunha Fisheries Co., LTD. is recalling certain frozen olive flounder sashimi products.

The issue is that accompanying soy sauce and vinegar red pepper paste packets contain wheat, soy, and sesame, but these allergens were not declared in English on the individual containers.

If you might react to wheat, soy, or sesame, check whether your product is included and avoid using it. The recall notice lists the products being pulled.

What to do

- Do not use the recalled frozen olive flounder sashimi products.
- Follow the recall instructions for returning or disposing of the affected items.
