Wakefern recalls organic unsweetened apple sauce over high patulin

CDC · Food safety

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is sharing a voluntary recall from Wakefern Food Corp. for select containers of Wholesome Pantry Organic Unsweetened Apple Sauce.

Routine FDA testing identified elevated patulin levels that exceed food safety limits and don't meet Wakefern's quality standards.

The recall notice is dated 2026-09-14 and references Keasbey, New Jersey, where the company is located.

Star Meat Delivery recalls raw pork, beef, and goat products

CDC · Food safety

If you bought, have, or ate raw pork, beef, or goat products from Star Meat Delivery Inc., this recall may affect you.

The products were produced without the benefit of inspection, which means they were not inspected during production.

If you have any of these products, the recall alerts you that they may not be safe to eat.

Glutathione sterile vials flagged for possible bacterial endotoxin contamination

FDA · Recall

If you received Glutathione 200 mg/mL in a 30 mL sterile multidose vial, the US Food and Drug Administration says product test results were out of specification for bacterial endotoxin.

Endotoxin is a substance produced by certain bacteria; higher-than-expected levels can indicate contamination, so the vial may pose a risk if used.

The distribution covered the United States nationwide. If you're unsure whether your supply is one of these vials, check with the pharmacy or facility that supplied it.
